The Subarctic people occupied a majority of Canada from the Yukon to Newfoundland, including parts of seven provinces and two territories.

Tribal Relations / War

Innu Man

- The Algonquian speaking groups of Northern Quebec bound together in the mid-17th century, mainly after violent Iroquois wars prompted them to increase their strength to defend and protect themselves if needed.
- The Innu were descended from people who came to Québec-Labrador thousands of years ago.
 - They briefly fought the Inuit, Iroquois, Micmac, and Abenaki, but were not a warring nation.
 - Innu traded with their neighbouring Cree and southern allies.
- The Chipewyan warred against the southerly Cree, but after the 1700s, they allied together and warred against the Inuit and Dene peoples north of them.
